Building new opportunities

■ An new, innovative partnership is set to deliver cutting-edge construction training and technology to meet the needs of both traditional trades and new technologies

Good news for local residents, Waltham Forest Council has announced that Dudley College of Technology will be taking over the Construction Training Centre in Leyton.

The college is one of twenty outstanding further education colleges in the UK and is considered a national leader of training in modern methods of construction delivery including the use of virtual reality, drone technology and robotics.

This partnership with the college is crucial – one of the council's priorities is building opportunities for our local workforce, and the trades and skills learnt in the Centre will ensure that those in training are equipped to meet the demands on the industry.

The council will actively engage with local residents on regeneration plans and ensuring that they are first in line for new opportunities. They will be promoting 'Construction and the Built Environment' as an industry and the value of the construction skill set residents can attain in the borough.

The college will be working in partnership with Simian Risk – the UK's largest scaffolding training provider, who will ensure that the Centre continues to address crucial skills gaps in the sector; while coming up with tailor-made solutions for industry.

The Centre Management partnership comes with Mayor's Construction Academy Kitemark status, which will enable the council and the college to work collaboratively with the Greater London Authority (GLA) on their construction training agenda.

Deputy Mayor for Planning, Regeneration and Skills, Jules Pipe, said: "By promoting the use of virtual reality training courses, digital technology and modern methods of construction, the new centre will help realise the Mayor's ambition to equip Londoners with up-to-date skills employers need and create a workforce capable of delivering more homes in the future."

Cllr Simon Miller, Waltham Forest's Cabinet Member for Economic Growth and High Streets said: "Dudley College of Technology presented an exciting programme of activity and transformation to current Centre activity and demonstrated a history of high-quality and innovative training delivery which will not only benefit our residents and the local economy, but the industry as a whole."

Dudley College will begin their tenure as Centre Manager in February 2019.

Digital Month at the Anti-Bullying Workshop

Jamil Wallace at the Anti-bullying workshop

National Anti-Bullying Week kicked off on Monday 12 November, and became an important focus during Digital Month. Waltham Forest Council teamed up with the Young Advisors and the Youth Independent Advisory Group (YIAG) to deliver cyberbullying awareness workshops in schools throughout the borough.

On Tuesday 13 November, Jamil Wallace and Kamahl Sami-Miller of the YIAG, and Roni Weir of the Waltham Forest Young Advisors ran a workshop focusing on cyberbullying with Year 10 students at the Walthamstow Academy.

The workshops covered what cyberbullying can look like, and what the consequences are for individuals affected, both short and long-term. They also explored what can be done when a student witnesses bullying, whether online or in school corridors, and what tools are available to report such incidents.

Jamil Wallace said: "I became a YIAG member because I grew up on an estate where gang culture and youth violence was an everyday occurrence. I felt like a bystander for a lot of my childhood, and felt that the voice of young people – especially young people from the black, Asian and minority ethnic (BAME) community was frequently ignored. I didn't want to continue feeling like I didn't have a voice."

The workshop aimed to teach young people to recognise the signs of bullying – particularly online. Specifically, it highlighted that while the label of being a bully is hard to accept, a young person may feel that they are being bullied by someone who calls themselves a friend. The workshop provided safe space for young people to identify, address and minimise this.

The session was popular with the students, with the main feedback being that they wanted more time. These workshops provided them with an open platform, and started a conversation about the common reality of cyberbullying, how to recognise it, reject it and move beyond it.

From the Leader

Cllr Clare Coghill

Young people within Waltham Forest are our future leaders. They make up an integral voice of the council and as part of a National Youth Takeover, we are showcasing how they are always at the forefront of key decision making.

This month alone, Young Advisor to the council, 19-year-old Roni Weir chaired the Children and Family Scrutiny Committee, young people shadowed council members and 24-year-old Bilal Boumediene co-chaired our Cabinet meeting.

This edition of Waltham Forest

News couldn't possibly cover everything young people do to make Waltham Forest the uniquely exciting, creative and diverse place it is, but it touches upon some of the stories and initiatives that are important to them, in their own words.

Look out for the #WFTakeover stamp across the issue and on our social channels over the next few weeks to join the conversation.

Young people also hold Waltham Forest accountable for delivering on promises to support and improve their life chances. From the Children in Care Pledge, to tackling youth violence – they are integral to positive change. We hope you find this issue valuable it was a privilege to bring it together with the youth of Waltham Forest to inform and inspire all our residents, whatever age they are.

Over now to one of our Young Advisors, 19-year-old Roni Weir:

"This Youth Takeover edition is a great initiative that has given young people the platform to showcase the amazing work they are doing in the borough and challenge a negative narrative that we so often see playing out in the media. Having grown up in Waltham Forest and taking the brilliant opportunity to be a Young Advisor to Waltham Forest Council, I know our borough is full of talented, creative, passionate, incredible, young people who are ready to change the world.

"From the Children in Care Council, Care Leavers, Young Advisors and the Youth Independent Advisor Group to young people making decisions and improvements every day – the work that young people are doing here is pivotal, innovative and set to change the future."

Opportunities to flourish

Waltham Forest Council has made 'giving young people opportunities to flourish' one of the four priority areas in our action plan to improve life chances.

Part of this plan – 'Creating Futures for Young People' – was published in September in response to the recommendations of the Life Chances Commission. From increasing the number of apprenticeships available, to ensuring careers advice is the best it can be – it sets out a broad range of projects to improve youth opportunities.

Many of these projects are already underway and include both the Borough of Culture Leadership programme and the recent careers fair at the Town Hall. Later this year, a new 'Apprenticeships Strategy' will set out how the council will create more apprenticeships and work experience placements around the borough. At the end of last month, there was also a 'Think Work Summit', to discuss how businesses can do more for young people and residents.

Waltham Forest Council is also working to create a 'Living Wage

Zone' of businesses that pay all their employees the London Living Wage or above. There are now 18 accredited businesses in the borough. The most recent business to come on board is the Tap Traproom, on Ravenswood industrial estate. This work has been supported by local community groups and campaigners. Earlier in November, the council organised a Living Wage Business Breakfast to celebrate progress in the borough and talk to new businesses about the benefits of Living Wage accreditation. The breakfast was a joint effort between Waltham Forest Council, Living Wage UK and local community groups St. Mary's Church and Waltham Forest Citizens UK.

Young people will lead our work to boost opportunities

One of the key initiatives in our plan to improve Life Chances is the 'Opportunity Bank'. The Opportunity Bank will give young people access to more information about job vacancies, work experience and traineeships, apprenticeships, as well as advice on health and housing.

Young people will be at the heart of identifying these opportunities and five of them have been recruited as a 'Life Chances Task Force' to support the Opportunity Bank project. Work on the project will begin this December.

Life Chances: Need to know

The Life Chances Commission was set up in 2017 by Leader Clare Coghill to investigate how young people's life chances could be improved. The commission included experts from education and business backgrounds as well as young people, and covered three stages of young life – early years, school and post school. In September 2018, the council launched its action plan to boost the life chances of young people: 'Creating Futures for Young People'.

Actions focus across four priority areas: ensuring every child gets the best start in life, providing a good quality education for every child, supporting young people to be resilient, confident and healthy, and giving young people the opportunities to flourish. The council also pledged a new way of working: designing and delivering the Life Chances programme in collaboration with young people, parents, schools and partners.

Careers Fair boost for young people

At the Fair

More than 600 local young people, many with their parents, met employers, training providers and colleges at a Careers Fair for Young People organised by the council on Tuesday 20 November. Throughout the day, students from secondary schools across the borough visited the Assembly Hall in Forest Road, Walthamstow, to discuss their future opportunities. There was information on apprenticeships, traineeships and further education courses, as well as details of jobs and volunteering opportunities in a wide range of businesses from arts to engineering and more.

Among those in attendance were Apprentice Solicitors from city-based, Eversheds Sutherland. Jennifer Davies, who is in her second year of her apprenticeship, said: "Eversheds Sutherland is offering a degree level apprenticeship leading to a career in law, meaning you can graduate in law while being paid for working in the firm." It was also the first time at a Careers Fair for Young People for Diagnostic Radiographer, Nicki Gordon, who said: "There is a national radiography day each year which focuses on young people already following radiography courses but with a national shortage of radiographers we decided to see the level of interest among younger people. It's an important career and there's a shortage so radiographers so you're practically guaranteed to find work when you qualify."

The council is committed to making sure careers information and advice is consistent and high quality across the borough, as part of our priority to the improve life chances of our residents.

Big investment for opportunities

A £3.6 million creative working space, which will help to guide disadvantaged young people into the creative industries, is due to open next week on Monday 3 December.

Following investment from the Greater London Authority (GLA), Charity Bank and Big Issue Invest (BII), Creative Works, in Blackhorse Lane, Walthamstow, will act as a workspace for 100 creative industry professionals and small to medium employers.

In turn, up to 100 young people aged from 16 to 24-years-old from North and East London will be offered apprenticeships, training, mentoring and practical support provided by those using the space. The aim is to provide those young people with the skills, knowledge and expertise needed to work in the creative sector.

Creative Works is in a refurbished 100-year-old building that developed engines for fighter planes during World War One. It will be part of a new 'Big Creative Village' masterminded by Big Creative Education, a creative hub at the heart of the Blackhorse Lane regeneration area.

Creative Works asked local designers and makers to help them furnish and decorate the space preserving its unique character whilst bringing in functionality. Bespoke co-working desks, custom-built bay dividers and private offices have been designed to provide privacy, ample storage and flexibility.

Additional features at Creative Works include a post-production 'sound cube', a fully-equipped digital training suite, a range of high-specification meeting rooms and a boardroom equipped for video-conferencing that can also be used for small events or training. 'The Square' event space will host Creative Works exciting programme of social and industry events and can be hired out for private events.

Alexis Michaelides, Managing Director at Big Creative Training, said: "The investments from Big Issue Invest, GLA and Charity Bank have helped us enormously to achieve our mission to support young people into creative careers. Unlike a commercial bank, our funders have been involved in all aspects required to ensure a successful and sustainable business that will play an important role in promoting diversity within London's creative economy."

James Salmon, Investment Director at Big Issue Invest, said: "We know Alexis and his team will provide young people who would ordinarily find it near impossible to enter the creative industries a vibrant space to learn and gather valuable on the job experience."

Creative Works, a space to thrive

Youth violence in focus

#WFTAKEOVER

Kamahl Sami-Miller and Supt Paul Clements

Kamahl Sami-Miller, 22, from Walthamstow, has been working with Waltham Forest Council as a YIAG (Youth Independent Advisory Group) member since 2012. He studied Drama and English at Buckingham New University. He is interested in acting and wants to work within politics at a local level to influence positive change in communities. Supt Paul Clements also lives in Walthamstow. He is Head of Safeguarding in Waltham Forest and Newham at the Met Police. Here, Kamahl sits in conversation with Paul to ask about the work the Met are doing around disenfranchisement, gang activity and youth violence in the borough.

Kamahl: "Given the significant cuts in police officers since 2010, how are you ensuring that the Met achieves the right balance between suppressing youth violence and protecting young people who find themselves in positions of vulnerability?"

Paul: "We work closely with our partners including Waltham Forest Council and the NHS. We offer post-traumatic interventions for a young person who have been sexually or criminally exploited or coerced – those who have been in gangs. It's not just good enough for us to move youth away from gangs. It's about supporting individual recovery – we take a 'trauma-informed' approach."

Kamahl: "I think there are a lot of mental health issues in young people and families that go unchecked. The willpower not to do something isn't always to do with cuts and lack of resources. It's to do with mental health support and certain violent behaviors becoming normalised."

Paul: "That's why we're working with partners – schools, councils, health care providers to try and spot those vulnerabilities and young people who are more susceptible to violence. The traumatic effects of being exposed to domestic violence for example, have a long-lasting impact. We work closely with councils and social care providers to offer 'placement stability' and provide a more positive experience for them."

Kamahl: "There are a lot of intervention points along the way before a young person resorts to life-changing violence. I think it's a multi-faceted response that's needed. A lot of vulnerable young people haven't learnt respect for authority or fear of negative consequences. It's a domino-effect trauma that ripples through communities."

Paul: "That's a good point. There are a small number of families that have a disproportionate demand on services – be that council or social so it's right that we take a 'think family' approach to services as a whole. We are not there to point blame but to assess where there's risk and opening up lines of communication is a priority for the Met in Waltham Forest.

Kamahl: "A lot of young people don't want the stigma of police intervention. They're in a desperate situation themselves, desensitized to their own identities and don't have the guidance of a route to follow."

Paul: "I had a supportive, safe upbringing so have to really work to put myself in the place of those young people who don't have that network. I connect with colleagues on the front line who are trying to engage with young people who have had adverse experiences and don't want to communicate with police and outreach services."

Kamahl: "I think everyone has a role to play and keep this momentum going. My mum has said before, 'It takes a village to raise a child.'"

Paul: "Yes. In the here and now, it takes a community to raise a child. Communication and links across services and communities are crucial."

The Hub opens

On 26 October, Waltham Forest Council successfully launched their dedicated drop-in Hub for Care Leavers and a new digitalised Care Leavers offer. To mark the launch and celebrate of National Care Leavers week, the council put on a range of activities to highlight what can be expected from The Hub. It included young people taking part in courses at City Hall, career and cooking workshops, a team-building trip to Go-Karting plus lots more. The Mayor of Waltham Forest Cllr Sally Littlejohn cut the ribbon to declare the opening of the new drop-in space for care leavers and children in care. The Hub provides a safe environment for young people living in care and leaving care, to seek advice and support. The drop-in space aims to enable young people to develop life skills, access training, and employment opportunities whilst building a support network within their peer group at a time when they may need extra support. Info: <https://bit.ly/2DuSfNT>

YIAG award wins

YIAGs celebrate their well-earned award

The Youth Independent Advisory Group (YIAG) was founded in 2009. The group engages young people in the borough interested in community safety issues to work together with Waltham Forest Council, police and the local community.

#WFTAKEOVER

The YIAG is intrinsic in the positive development of young people – many with lived experience of youth violence – as leaders in the community using their awareness of issues that affect young people in the borough.

The YIAG are supported by the Waltham Forest Safer Neighbourhood Board with funding from the Mayor's Office for Policing and Crime.

Wendy Baah, a 24-year-old YIAG member said: "We create and facilitate peer workshops at Pupil Referral Units, Youth Offending Teams and in schools. We also sit on strategic boards such as the Stop and Search monitoring board and Community Scrutiny, where we input our concerns and ideas about how to improve life for young people in the borough."

The success of the YIAG has been recognised through many awards. Last year, Jhanzab 'Jamal'

Khan, a 22-year-old YIAG member won the charity LEAP Young Leader award. He continues in his efforts to affect change in young people, notably with an upcoming inspirational book that draws from his experiences in prison.

The YIAG's highlight this year was the winning of another national award at the Young Advisors AGM (Annual General Meeting) in Sheffield. They won 'Best Community project 2018' for the work they do as a team and their impact in the community – a huge achievement and testament to the their hard work.

Who are the Children in Care Council?

The Children in Care Council are a group of young people in care and care leavers who meet regularly to support and represent the voice of children and young people in care and care leavers in Waltham Forest.

One Children in Care Council member said: "When we meet we discuss what Children's Services do well and not so well. We talk about ways social service could improve. I think it has increased the influence that young people have in decision-making"

The Children in Care Council work closely with the Waltham Forest Council's Voice and Influence Service to make sure the views of children and young people have direct input into how care services are run.

The Pledge for Children in Care, one year on

In October 2017, Waltham Forest Council signed up to the Pledge for Children in Care. The Pledge was created with the Children in Care Council and The Voice and Influence Service.

This enabled the voice of looked after children (LAC) to be heard in terms of what is important to them – how they could get the best possible support to help them improve their life chances and reach their full potential as they grow up.

This September, The Children in Care Council worked with the Voice and Influence Service to send out surveys to the entire looked-after population. This was to find out whether young people in Waltham Forest felt the promises made in The Pledge were actually what they experienced. The results highlighted areas of The Pledge young people saw as working well and those that needed more focus.

Cllr Grace Williams, Cabinet Member for Children and Young People explained: "While the results of this Pledge to Children in Care survey are positive, we recognise that working closely with, and fully representing the voice of LAC and children in care is an on-going conversation that we are committed to. The Youth Takeover edition of Waltham Forest News is just a glimpse into a world of positive news stories that the young people of Waltham Forest are making happen for themselves – their integration into our future decision-making is vital."

Voices in Partnership working for and with young people

Voices in Partnership (VIP) is a youth engagement group that Waltham Forest Council Early Help services facilitate. Young people who have been through the criminal justice system on orders are invited to attend VIP sessions as part of their rehabilitation, to feel their voices are heard and to recognise that they have power to change things for the better. 18-year-old Sophie (not real name), had an interest in law and was invited to do a work placement. Here, as a young person who has been through the criminal justice system, she explains the support she received from VIP:

"Being a part of the VIP group, has been very helpful and through the VIP group I received a huge amount of support from Sherry Davis, the Consultation Manager in Early Help and my mentor. We took part in life skills projects that included teaching young people how to budget when we had the task to redesign the Early Help reception.

"The VIP group was able to link me with the Mayor of London's Peer Outreach Team, a group of young people across the capital who help influence the Mayor's policies. This gave me a focus to learn and be a part of amazing events, where I'm able to give not just my own but also other young people's views and for our voices to be heard.

"Through the VIP group, Sherry also introduced me to Generation Success, an organisation that connects young people from disadvantaged backgrounds to advisors from various professional industries.

"By going to Generation Success, it allowed me to learn from successful people in the law field, where they offered me work experience and various tips to help build my confidence and support my future career aspirations." The VIP group will be widening their remit to include young people aged from 14 to 19-years-old to be involved with Early Help services in 2019. Young people at the heart of decision-making

Bilal seated next to Cllr Clare Coghill in Cabinet

As part of National Youth Takeover, Waltham Forest Council hosted a range of events showcasing how the voice of local young people is at the forefront of key decision making. Young people from a range of backgrounds delivered workshops, 19-year-old Roni Weir chaired the Children and Family Scrutiny Committee and young people shadowed senior members of the council as well as co-chairing senior meetings, such as Cabinet.

Cabinet members and the Council Leader, Cllr Clare Coghill welcomed 24-year-old Bilal Boumediene to co-chair Cabinet on Thursday 15 November.

Bilal Boumediene, from Waltham Forest said: "I am passionate about inspiring, teaching and educating by giving back to young people within Waltham Forest, and helping to shape decisions which will impact them. It was an amazing experience to be able to co-chair cabinet with Cllr Clare Coghill and learn more about how decisions are made within Waltham Forest. As a young person, it's important to see everyone working together to improve things in the borough for the next generation, and bring the voice of youth to the centre of the council."

Making it work: Style On Them

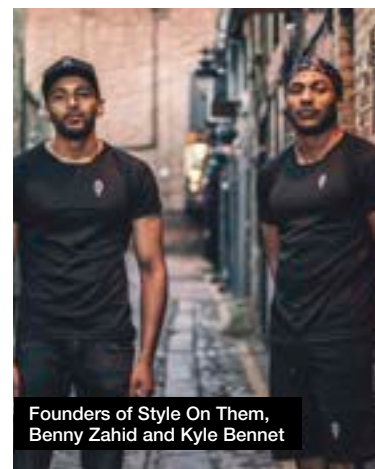

Alongside a care leaver's offer that includes a dedicated drop-in hub and digitised services to support and improve care leavers' life chances, Waltham Forest Council is keen to recognise and celebrate local youth success stories.

We spoke to local entrepreneur Benny Zahid, who alongside friend and business partner, Kyle Bennett, designed and launched a clothing line, 'Style On Them' (SOT) in 2015.

Benny said: "The brand focusses on outstanding quality and attention to detail. It also has a positive root message as it was founded by my friend Kyle, and I when we were caught in negative cycles and gang activity. We started SOT to move away from that lifestyle and inspire people in similar circumstances to do the same. SOT's ethos as a brand is about giving back to the youth alongside our growth through our community-inclusive projects. Our projects include entrepreneurship workshops and one-to-one youth mentoring with founders and our creative network to help them build platforms to surface and promote areas they're passionate about."

SOT are now based online and also run several pop-up stores around the UK. The brand is currently in the process of launching a bespoke concept, making it the first streetwear brand to offer a completely made-to-measure service on tracksuits.

Luke Doyley meets Sam Hunt

#WFTAKEOVER

Young Advisor, Luke Doyley was part of delegation group that consulted on and delivered the bid to be the first ever London Borough of Culture to City Hall back in December 2017.

As well as acting as a Young Advisor to Waltham Forest Council, the 20-year-old is a local performer – most recently performing with peers at the HighTide Festival ‘Stars over the Forest’ event in September of this year. In May of this year, Young Advisor Luke was on the interview panel to recruit the new London Borough of Culture 2019 Creative Director, Sam Hunt.

Luke said: “I remember Sam being confident at the interview; he was talking about how he’d done similar work in other areas. I asked him if his heart would be in it for young people and he replied that young people were a key part of the London Borough of Culture bid. It would be one of his main aims for us to be included and a primary objective of the project.”

Since then, the ‘Legends of the Forest’ volunteer programme has been launched and at the end of October, the first acts of the Waltham Forest programme were announced.

Luke met up with Sam again to discuss the progress so far:

Luke: Hi Sam, so how’s everything been going since I last saw you?

Sam: “Hi Luke, things have been going at 100 miles per hour in a really good way – it’s such a short amount of time between winning the bid for London Borough of Culture and now launching the programme, the entire team have been all out on ensuring next year is as good as it can be. It’s a real privilege working on a project like this in Waltham Forest – from our team to artists to communities and individuals we meet, everyone seems excited about next year and it’s our responsibility to ensure we get as many people involved as possible and make good on all the promises made.”

Luke: Back at your interview I asked if young people would be included in the London Borough of Culture. Do you think young people do feel included in the programme now and how have you made them feel included?

Sam: “Almost every project or artist commission we’re helping make happen is designed to be co-created with communities and individuals of Waltham Forest – young people make up a creative force that’s vital to our success.”

Luke: How will you create platforms for young people to pursue their dreams?

Sam: “A lot of this is about ensuring everyone in Waltham Forest can find opportunities that resonate with their own lives and aspirations. If a young person has a particular interest in a career in arts and culture or they are an artist, like yourself, there will be loads of opportunities to get involved. That might be through the individual events – for instance the open call from Addictive TV looking for musicians and performers for the opening event or by volunteering to become one of our Legends of The Forest. Make sure you’re signed up to all our social channels, mailing lists and keep an eye on the website to find out more.

“Beyond performing or volunteering, we have also committed to help develop 100 individuals as the next generation of cultural leaders. This will be through key work placements, mentoring and professional development. It’s an initiative designed to help ensure that 2019 is just the beginning of a living cultural legacy, again details will be released through our various channels.”

Luke: I’ve seen you have a new London Borough of Culture office at One Hoe Street – young people have said it could’ve been a youth club – can the public, particularly young people access it in any way?

Sam: “It’s designed to be a hub for the year and young people are integral to that – they’re absolutely welcome. One Hoe Street is not just a place to get info on what’s happening but very much a community space. Members of the London Borough of Culture team will be there every Wednesday afternoon from 1pm to 5pm and we’d love to chat about how the space can be used by young people – and indeed anyone who’s interested.”

Young people tell their story

EastSide Story will bring the voice of Waltham Forest's youth to the fore

EastSide Story will unite young people from two Waltham Forest estates to tell their own stories in their own words and be filmed for a major documentary during the London Borough of Culture 2019 year.

A group of 14 to 19-year-olds from Priory Court and Chingford Hall estates will create a brand new performance, drawing loosely on elements from the West Side Story

Beyond being an outlet for artistic expression, this project will use Transformational Youth Work, Coaching and Performing Arts workshops to shed light on the many talents of local young people, enabling them to share their stories and develop new ways of looking at the challenges they face.

Robin Lockhart, Founder of Catalyst In Communities, who will be leading the Youth Work and Coaching sessions for EastSide Story explains: “All change begins in the mind and our programme stimulates this process – enabling new stories to be written and new roles adopted, on stage and in life. Performers can practice different emotions and feel how they change. The performance and creative elements of this project also provide a much needed outlet for young people to express their feelings through art.”

EastSide Story will be both a documentary film and year-long engagement programme featuring a number of leading artists from Waltham Forest, who will return to where they were brought up to inspire the next generation. The project will see leading specialists from RAW Academy and Catalyst in Communities join forces with celebrity mentors from the area including Talvin Singh, Harris Dickinson and Sir Matthew Bourne.

Robin said: “I have been involved in Youth Work for over 20 years and have seen many changes both in how society views and treats young people and also in how young people view themselves. We all see the terrible headlines about gun and knife violence and the serious issues around gangs, but some of the stories are misleading. Why always focus on the negative? I wanted to do something positive in my own borough with RAW Academy to bring youth work and stage performance together in a force for good for our young people. I came up with the idea of participants telling and re-writing their own life stories. My sister, Producer and Director Clare Lockhart, then put together a proposal for the project to be filmed as a documentary. We want to collaborate, bringing our skills together to give young people in the borough a voice and a means to work positively with the challenges they face, re-writing their futures with their own EastSide Story.”

EastSide Story will work with 14 to 19-year-olds from Chingford Hall and Priory Court Estates, with more broadcasting details to be released in the new year. If you are a young person who would like to be involved or work with suitable participants, please email:

Addictive TV collaborate with local musicians

Artist duo Addictive TV with musicians Dia Gomis and Benjamin Racionzer at One Hoe Street

One Hoe Street, Waltham Forest's London Borough of Culture hub for public events, networking and exhibitions, opened last month and is already a hive of creativity.

Earlier this month innovative electronic duo Addictive TV took over the building for a day of collaboration with local musicians.

Addictive TV are one of a number of world-renowned artists collaborating to create 'Welcome to the Forest', the opening event for London Borough of Culture from 11 to 13 January 2019. Taking place over three locations, the Town Hall will be transformed into a high octane audio-visual spectacle, Forest Road will become a neon-lit winter carnival leading people to Lloyd Park, where an epic light installation will transform the familiar into the fantastical.

Over the past two months,

Addictive TV have recorded around 40 local musicians – from guitarists and steel pan drummers to percussionists and cellists – to create a dynamic audio-visual installation to be projected on the Town Hall.

"I've lived in Leyton most of my life and it's been really exciting to witness the transformation here, especially since the Olympics, and now this can only increase."

The duo are composing music by sampling the rich and diverse talent they've filmed from across Waltham Forest.

Commenting on the project,

Addictive TV's Graham Daniels said: "I've lived in Leyton most of my life and it's been really exciting to witness the transformation here, especially since the Olympics, and now this can only increase. Mark and I are stoked to be creating this piece for the opening weekend, recording and digitally sampling so many local artists; it's really great to make these connections.

"Our on-going project 'Orchestra of Samples' is about bringing people together. We create new music by sampling musicians we've filmed around the world in the last ten years – over 200 now in more than 30 countries – and it's fantastic to inject a healthy dose of Waltham Forest talent into the mix. Orchestra of Samples, being such a global venture, makes this commission a fantastic opportunity to bring a truly international project home."

Investing in the future of creative industries

Creative United investing in the Blackhorse Lane area

Creative United has been awarded a contract by the Business Growth Team at Waltham Forest Council to deliver a business support programme to businesses in Blackhorse Lane. Set to benefit will be artists, makers, designers, producers, arts organisations and music companies, coinciding with the borough's year as the first London Borough of Culture in 2019.

Recognising the significant growth in creative businesses in an area described by the Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, as a "forgotten gem", the Greater London Authority-funded programme will focus on the communities based at Switchboard Studios, Yonder, Blackhorse Workshop, Blackhorse Atelier and Gnome House. The programme will offer free courses of workshops, networking events and one-to-one support to enable entrepreneurs, artists and cultural enterprises to fulfil their potential for growth and impact.

Businesses will be able to apply for a place on the programme from December 2018, with the first cohort embarking on their course of business support in spring 2019.

Cllr Simon Miller, Lead Member for Economic Growth and High Streets, said: "This is a fantastic opportunity for local businesses in Blackhorse Lane, an area where the creative industries are thriving. We are committed to keep, seed and grow local businesses in the borough and are delighted to partner with Creative United to deliver this free programme that will really make a difference. As we approach 2019 and our year as the first London Borough of Culture, we want to make sure local businesses can take advantage of the spotlight shone on us. This programme will give creative and cultural entrepreneurs the opportunity to do so."

Interested creative businesses can sign up to Creative United's mailing list and receive the latest news about its launch in December 2018 and the application process: bit.ly/culbwf2018

Young Advisors recruit next gen

Abdur-Raheem Modan (AR) is 17-years-old. He first applied to be a YA (Young Advisor) three years ago and has been helping to shortlist hundreds of applicants down to just 15 people in a fresh round of YA recruitment this autumn.

He said: "What I have always valued about the YA process is that it distinguishes between being heard and being listened to. Our recruitment process is a great example. Current YAs decide who should be offered the roles. We go through all the applications, lead the interviews and the final decision process."

Aside from being a YA to Waltham Forest Council, AR is a published writer and a project coordinator for an initiative called ABLEities, where he works on video and digital campaigns that raise awareness of living with disabilities. AR explains that becoming a YA has been one of the most positive experiences of his life.

He said: "Throughout my time in the role, I have worked closely with health services – as a patient and user of many different ones, I value being able to feedback and bring about change. Most recently, I have been part of a project focussing on mental health services for young people – the Youth Mental Health Ambassadors (YMHA) programme. A group of Young Advisors (and the Youth Independent Advisory Group (YIAG) our sister group, received accredited training and worked to collect and compile youth awareness and opinion of mental health services. It has been a success and I have loved working on it."

"What I have always valued about the YA process is that it distinguishes between being heard and being listened to."

From redundant rooms to family homes

Two new family homes have been created from community rooms that have not been used for more than five years.

A single storey community room at Yardley Lane, Chingford, has not been used for 10 years and is now a three-bedroom family home which will provide a home for five people while a similar community room at Wyatts Lane in Walthamstow has been converted into a two-bedroom family home for three people.

In both cases, an extra storey has been added to the existing building which has been modernised to meet current standards.

Cabinet Member for Housing,

Cllr Louise Mitchell said: "Neither of the rooms had been used for many years and the conversion proposals were only agreed after extensive local consultation. This is part of our drive to provide new housing for people on the council's waiting list. Converting buildings that we no longer need is usually quicker and much cheaper than building new homes and is a useful strand to our housing development strategy."

The work to both buildings was completed to a high standard by the Aston Group as part of a programme of five such conversions across the borough.

Replacement wheelie bin charges

Starting Wednesday 14 November there will be a £20 charge for ordering a replacement wheelie bin. This will apply to black refuse bins, green recycling bins and brown food and garden waste wheelie bins.

The charge will cover the cost of the bin administration and delivery, and will allow the council to continue delivering weekly waste and recycling collections, which we know residents value.

Each property is entitled to have one black refuse bin. The council is encouraging residents to recycle their waste – if you wish to order more than one green recycling or brown food and garden waste bin you may do so.

You can order a replacement bin by visiting the council's website. Here you can also find out about bin charges in the frequently asked questions section: bit.ly/2Gn2qnd

Emergency services and council tackling road safety

Mayor Cllr Sally Littlejohn with schoolchildren, emergency services and council officers at the road safety roadshow

Emergency services and road safety officers held a roadshow last week to recognise Road Safety Week.

An event held in Walthamstow Town Square Gardens on Wednesday 21 November saw residents and visitors to the square learn how paramedics, firefighters and police respond to road traffic collisions. School children also attended the event where they could get a better understanding of lorry drivers' blind spots by getting inside a driver's cab and learn more about the road improvements that have been introduced across the borough in recent years.

In line with this year's Bike Smart

theme the council's Road Safety Team also gave away lights and reflective items to cyclists travelling through along hotspots like Ruckholt Road and Lea Bridge Road.

Cllr Clyde Loakes, Deputy Leader and Cabinet Member for the Environment, said: "It is vital that everyone takes responsibility for not only their own safety, but the safety of all road users, when travelling. We have been working hard to improve the borough's roads so that they are safe for everyone, especially the most vulnerable, pedestrians and cyclists. In recent years as well as installing new cycle lanes, we've also built more formal pedestrian road crossings, better junctions and reduced traffic on local roads to prevent motorists using what should be quiet residential roads as a cut through. We're now enforcing against the abuse of this new infrastructure, as well as reducing speed limits on the borough's main roads because we all know that if everyone travels slower then we all have more time to react to prevent a serious accident."

The new speed limit of 20mph will be introduced on main roads, as well as stepping up parking enforcement on newly constructed cycle lanes following growing concerns from residents.

Health risks from sleeping rough: How to get help for those in need

Rough sleepers do not just face discrimination and discomfort on a daily basis – they are more likely to suffer from physical and mental health issues which can be exacerbated by life on the streets, but are conversely less likely to access health and support services when they need them.

A person may sleep rough as a result of poor health. This means certain problems, particularly mental health issues, substance misuse and alcohol dependency, are much more prevalent among rough sleepers. Evidence suggests many rough sleepers have more than one of these health needs.

Rough sleepers are also more likely to suffer problems in accessing health care and prevention services. As homelessness status is not usually recorded by health care services it can be difficult to get exact figures of those in need.

Cllr Naheed Asghar, Cabinet Member for Public Health and Voluntary Sector Partnerships, said: "No-one should have to go without medical care in the UK this day and age, no matter what their circumstances are. We work closely area – especially as winter starts to draw in."

The free StreetLink app is available for Apple and Android devices. To share concerns about someone in need of help, please try and provide as much detail as you can via the app – including the specific location of where the person is bedded down, details of the times you have seen them at that location, and any other information you can share that will help to identify them.

StreetLink will then share the information with local services, and if requested they can also update you as the referrer after 14 days. StreetLink is not an emergency service. In serious cases, where you are worried that the person is in immediate risk or danger, please call 999 straight away.
